

2. Internationally: The World Council of Churches

ä. Two prominent leaders:

a. John R. Mott (1865-1955)

b. Nathan Soderblum (1866-1931)

Every movement, of course, is possessed of a number of leaders and it is likely not fair to single out merely one or two. But these men are far more important to the later structure of the ecumenical movement than are many others and each deserves this special note. As you have seen they have differing backgrounds but a common interest allowed them to put their energies to a cause that would prove common in a very short time.

b. Three prominent moves:

a. The World Missionary Conference

b. The Life and Work Conference
